Abstract: With the maturity of globalization and development of the communication between different countries, linguistics research and studies have been attached to great significance in China. This paper focuses on the history of the development of Chinese linguistics, the recent status of the study, its connection with culture and how they promote and compensate with each other. Chinese linguistics is a necessary field of the study of the Chinese language's structure, which includes historical, cultural and social aspects. This paper also aims to provide an overview of the research status, significance, and future development of Chinese linguistics. It begins with a historical background and discusses recent advancements in the field and also points out its insufficient areas through comparative analysis and literature analysis. This paper also explores the linguistic diversity and unique characteristics of Chinese, including the origin use of Chinese characters, and the impact of Pinyin in China. Moreover, it highlights the current challenges faced in Chinese linguistics and examines the research landscape in other countries and regions in order to make comparisons. Finally, the paper discusses the significance of Chinese language research in language preservation, cultural inheritance, and societal development. This paper finds out the characteristics of modern Chinese and the important role that different folk dialects play in Chinese language and culture through summarizing and comparative research, and points out how to better combine the advantages of the Chinese language in the future so that Chinese linguistics can be further developed.

Keywords: Chinese characters, Chinese linguistics, Pinyin, Chinese culture

1. Introduction

The background of this research is based on the contemporary situation in the development of linguistics in China, and the situation that much more attention is now being paid to the study and protection of Chinese language, (for example, dialects in different regions).

The study of Chinese linguistics plays a crucial role in understanding the linguistic diversity and cultural heritage of China. With a history spanning thousands of years, the Chinese language has evolved and diversified, which has fostered numerous regional dialects, accents and variations. However, due to the rapid social and economic development and the need to preserve and propagate the Chinese culture (especially in aspects of language), there are growing concerns about the potential loss of linguistic diversity and cultural inheritance. Therefore, it is imperative and inevitable to carry on related research in certain fields in order to document, analyze, and preserve the rich linguistic heritage of China. Moreover, certain research and studies in translation between Chinese and English have found that Chinese and English are quite different, especially in the aspects of language system, language culture and language composition, including semantics, phonetics, etc [1]. All these are worth comparative analysis and research, so as to better understand the core of Chinese, how to speak Chinese well, and how to translate Chinese well [2]. In a word, learning Chinese linguistics well can better show the charm of Chinese in the translation between Chinese and other languages. This paper discusses the formation of Chinese characters, the history of Chinese characters, and the formation of Chinese minority languages to explain the richness and profound heritage of Chinese language, so as to point out the current problems in Chinese linguistics, as well as the future development direction and effectiveness of Chinese linguistics.

2. Aims and Objectives of Linguistics Research

The learning and dissemination of Chinese characters have enabled more people to master the ability to read and write Chinese characters. Through a long history, the growth of Chinese allows multi-ethnic countries like China to be linked to each other through a single language.

2.1. The Unique Significance of Studying Linguistics in China

The study of linguistics in China is also committed to promoting the development and application of language technology. With the progress of science and technology, language technology plays an important role in the fields of machine translation, speech recognition, natural language processing and so on. One of the goals of the study of linguistics is to use technical means to improve the efficiency and accuracy of language processing and communication. What's more, having a better understanding of Chinese linguistics can also help a translator or interpreter in China [3].

2.2. The Historical Significance of the World Study of Linguistics

Internationally, the goals of studying linguistics are somewhat different from those in China, but there are some common concerns. First, the international study of linguistics is devoted to cross-cultural communication and understanding. Language is the cornerstone of human society. Without language, it is difficult or impossible for us to understand the past, present and future of human beings and our society cannot survive. The famous linguist Chomsky (1928--), who has proposed universal grammar (UG) and the core grammar in his theory. He argued that universal grammar is an intermediary between a system of knowledge (i.e., language, or "Nova" in a broad sense) and presented experience (which can be understood as actual speech). This proves that linguistics is a universal subject for human beings, and the human brain has the ability to recognize and learn language, which is closely related to the study of linguistics. According to the universal grammar, which will eventually draw the concrete complex nature of natural language, and determine the complete core grammar of a certain language. Therefore, for Chomsky, universal grammar is also the theory of general linguistics. The formation of Chomsky's theories, as shown in Table 1:

Table 1: Periods of Chomsky's theories.

Period	Time	Name	Magnum opus
First stage	1957-1965	The First Linguistic Model	Syntactic Structures (Chomsky 1957)
Second stage	1965-1971	Standard Theory	Aspects of the Theory (Chomsky 1965)
Third stage	1971-1979	Extended Standard Theory	Essays on Form and Interpretation (Chomsky 1977)
Fourth stage	1980th	Government and Binding Theory	Lectures on Government and Binding

This type of study in linguistics promotes communication and understanding between different cultures by comparing the differences and similarities between different languages, exploring the connections and mutual influences between languages, and revealing the essence of linguistics.

Additionally, the international study of linguistics also focuses on language evolution. Language is a constantly changing system, it will evolve through the development of human society, and different languages undergo various changes and evolution at different times. Research linguistics is committed to studying the historical evolution of language and the laws of language change in order to better understand the process of language development and change.

In short, the study of linguistics has important goals and significance both in China and internationally. In China, the study of linguistics is committed to preserving and inheriting China's linguistic diversity, promoting the research of Chinese characters and regional dialects, and promoting the application of language technology. Internationally, studies in linguistics focus on intercultural communication and mutual understanding, language change and evolution, of human beings. And settle a lot of problems caused by language variety, find out the line between humans and animals. By studying linguistics, we can better understand and utilize language, promote the development of human culture and communication, and achieve the diversity and coexistence of languages. As a fundamental tool of culture exchange and communication, language is the most basic way for all humans to interact and get necessary improvements. But still, we have limitations in many aspects. for example, different religions or races. Therefore, it is necessary to make the content clear to the audience and take the current cultural environment into consideration and choose the right strategies while studying human linguistics.

3. The Significance and Value of Linguistics Developed in China

The study of Chinese linguistics is of great significance and value. According to the Journal Language Science, the study of minority languages can help modern Chinese people to protect the linguistic diversity of ethnic minorities and the unity of the whole country. For example, certain studies on Chinese characters can maintain the inheritance and development of Chinese culture. In addition, the study of Chinese linguistics can also promote the development and application of language technology and improve the efficiency and accuracy of language processing and communication. The study of Chinese linguistics will not only strengthen the confidence in domestic language and culture but also promote the influence and exchange and communications of Chinese language on the international stage.

The significance and value of maintaining and propagating Chinese linguistics lies in protecting and inheriting China's linguistic variety, promoting the research and development of Chinese characters, dialects, the applications in certain technology areas, (translation and interpretation, etc.)

“As is known to all, China has been a multi-ethnic country since ancient times. The whole country, all ethnic groups together to create a splendid Chinese culture, the formation of China Chinese national community, it is the Chinese people of all ethnic groups have created such a marvelous country in the long-term historical development. The formation of political unity, cultural inclusiveness, economic development and national community that is interdependent and emotionally close to each other which is built on a common foundation combining the historical conditions, the common pursuit of values, the common material foundation and the community of shared future with shared identity and spiritual homeland. ” [4]

Through the study of Chinese language and literature, we can better strengthen the link between traditional culture and socialist traditional morality. Especially under the current development trend of cultural diversification, foreign culture and local culture collide, penetrate and integrate with each other, linguistics have a positive and irreplaceable impact and function on people's values, outlook on life and world outlook. In the process of studying Chinese language and literature, it is necessary to deeply analyze the humanistic spirit and ethical thoughts inherent in traditional culture, excavate the rich connotation of traditional Chinese culture, and analyze the content and system of Chinese language and literature from an open and diversified perspective.

4. Research Status and Trends of Chinese Linguistics in the Future

4.1. The Main Research Fields and Problems of Domestic Linguistics Are Concerned at Present

Chinese linguistics has a wide range of fields, including phonetics, grammar, lexicology, semantics, pragmatics and so on. Firstly, phonetics is one of the important fields of Chinese linguistics. The study of phonetics is mainly concerned with the pronunciation and characteristics of language, as well as the law of phonetic variation and change. In Chinese linguistics, the study of phonetics mainly focuses on the tone and phonological system of Chinese.

Secondly, grammar is another important area of Chinese linguistic research. Chinese grammar has a more complicated structure than some other languages, its studies mainly focus on the syntactic structure of language, the organization of sentences and grammatical rules. In Chinese linguistics, the study of grammar emphasizes the components of Chinese words, syntactic structures and syntactic relations.

In recent years, China has attached great importance to the protection of local languages. At present, many universities in China have set up linguistics disciplines, and they are also focusing on training talents in secondary fields, as well as on publicity and education for the general public. For example, in the past few years, Shanghai subway has added announcements on Shanghainese, (Shanghai accents and dialects) and many regions have followed suit. It is no doubt an effective way to protect dialects in different areas of China.

4.2. Current Problems in the Field of Chinese Linguistics

One problem with phonetics research is the lack of a comprehensive study of different dialects and minority languages. China has rich linguistic resources, but research on some of the more minority dialects and minority languages is still relatively limited [5]. Therefore, future research needs to focus on these languages more comprehensively in order to fully understand and protect the diversity of these languages [6].

At present, China is vigorously protecting and promoting minority languages and cultures, and it is believed that in the near future, Chinese language will be more deeply explored and studied at home, and a better image will be established internationally.

4.3. Future Research Trends in Chinese Linguistics

With the development of technology, the future development trend of Chinese language is likely to be no longer limited to books, but will show more technical characteristics. For example, new media such as social media and Internet will become an important platform for the development of Chinese language, and Chinese language in the future will no longer be a single Chinese culture, but a world culture, which can promote international communication and education of Chinese language. Cultural exchange, translation and other aspects also bring infinite possibilities for the future development of the Chinese language.

5. Conclusion

China is a country with a long history, and Chinese has a history of thousands of years, which is a very elegant language, and it deserves our in-depth study and discussion. This paper mainly discusses the characteristics, future development trends and the significance of Chinese language research. Chinese scholars have made extensive and profound studies on Chinese characters and Pinyin, meanwhile, the fields of translation and interpretation in China are also booming. However, many minority languages and cultures lack protectors and witnesses in the long history.

Through the discussion and research in this paper, Chinese linguistics not only provides an important basis and guarantee for the study of Chinese culture but also promotes the exchange and development of world civilization. However, at present, the research on the language and culture of Chinese ethnic minorities is still scarce and this paper does not involve much content related to minority languages. Future research may focus on the development of ethnic minority languages and cultures in various regions of China and their role in promoting the development of the Chinese language.
